Summary

The Federal Fair Housing Act of 1968, the Fair Housing Amendments Act of 1988, prohibit discrimination against any person because of race, color, religion, sex, handicap, familial status, or national origin in the sale, rental, leasing, financing and advertising of housing, or in the prevention of real estate brokerage services; and the practice generally known as "block busting" is also illegal.

The Connecticut Housing Law has been deemed substantially equivalent with the Federal Fair Housing Act. Administration and enforcement of the Act is by the Commission on Human Rights and Opportunities, which may receive complaints directly from individual citizens or by referral from HUD.

In Connecticut, you have a right to fair housing. This means that you have the right to choose where to live, to raise a family, to own a home. It is your right to do so in dignity and without fear of discrimination because of your race, color, religion, sex, national origin, or because you are disabled or have children in your family or are pregnant. Fair housing in Connecticut also means you may freely choose a place to live without regard to your age, ancestry, marital status, sexual orientation or lawful source of income (which means that income from social security, SSI, housing assistance, child support, alimony, public or general assistance should not restrict your housing rights).

CHRO enforces the laws which protect you against violations of your housing rights.
